III. General instructions for the maintenance of aircraft and engine log books.

- (i) Aircraft and engine log books should contain a fully detailed engineering record of the life of the aircraft or the engine respectively, including full particulars of all accidents, overhauls, re-placements, repairs and all work of a like nature. Log Books must be maintained in accordance with the printed instructions for use given on the first page thereof.
- (ii) All necessary entries should be made in the relevant log books at the latest within 24 hours of the return of the aircraft to its normal base, or, when the aircraft is already at its base, within 24 hours of the completion of the work. Full details of such work should be given, entries should be co-related clearly, and available serial numbers of components quoted. When new parts are fitted, a reference to the Release Note under cover of which such parts were received, or to a number from which the Release Note can readily be traced, should be given.
- (iii) Ground Engineers carrying out inspections (excluding the daily inspection referred to in Rule 60 of the Indian Aircraft Rules, 1937,) or the repair, modification, overhaul, or replacement of any part of an aircraft or aero engine, are responsible for ensuring that the particulars referred to in para (ii) are entered in the relevant log books.
- (iv) In cases where the aircraft or engine log book is not available the particulars should be given separately but shall be pasted in the log book as soon as practicable, and be kept with the Journey Log Book or with the working copies of the air craft or engine log book, until so pasted.

IV. Journey Log Book.

1. This book will be issued by the Director General of Civil Aviation, who will also complete the first page.
2. It shall be carried on board the aircraft during every flight.
3. The commander or person in charge of the aircraft is responsible for maintaining this book. Entries must be made in ink or indelible pencil and shall be made before presenting the Log Book to the Aerodrome Customs, Health or other authorities concerned on completion of the flight. The entries shall be certified by the signature of the commander or person in charge for each flight (except as provided in paragraph 5 below). Entries made in column 10 in accordance with paragraphs 7(d) and (e) below and entries made in Columns 11 and 12 shall be certified by the authorities concerned.
4. No entry shall be rubbed out or scratched out; no page shall be torn out.
5. In this book must be entered all relevant data and particulars concerning each flight. In the case of a series of short flights in a closed circuit, carried out with the same purpose and under the control of the same responsible commander, it will suffice, in respect of columns 6, 7 and 8, to enter the time of the first departure and of the last arrival and the total duration of the whole of these flights, as well as the number of landings.
6. A "flight" comprises the period between the time of departure and the time of the next landing. A separate folio shall be used for each separate journey, but a series of flights forming part of one journey may be entered on one folio.
7. In column 10 (right hand pages) all significant information with regard to the flight or journey shall be entered, particularly—
  - (a) All unusual events, e.g., details of unscheduled landings and their causes (mechanical defect, bad weather etc.) accidents (cause and results, damage to third parties, etc.).
  - (b) Any special observations concerning the journey and the functioning of the aircraft and its engines.
  - (c) Matters affecting public health which have occurred in or in relation to the aircraft during each flight of journey.
  - (d) Public health measures undergone by the aircraft before departure or at intermediate stops, whether by application of the International Sanitary Convention for Aerial Navigation, 1933, or otherwise. These should be certified by the authorities responsible for the operation.

- (e) All necessary information concerning the existence in the local area from which the aircraft is about to depart of any of the infectious diseases referred to in part III of the International Sanitary Convention (i.e. plague, cholera, yellow fever, small pox, exanthematic typhus). This information shall be entered by the competent health or aerodrome authorities at the aerodrome of departure. Such entries shall be made during a period of not less than 15 days from the declaration of the existence of the disease by the competent health authorities of the country. Aircraft are not required to have a bill of health. Entries relating to public health in the Journey Log Book shall be verified and certified, free of charge, by the competent authority of the aerodrome concerned.

8. All information contained in the Journey Log Book which has to be entered in the aircraft or engine log books shall be so entered as soon as possible after the return of the aircraft to its station.
9. This book shall be presented on demand to the competent Aerodrome, Health, Customs or other authorities of any country traversed.
